Here our guide, Julio, who has lived on Motzorongo since General Pacheco s time, pointed out ahead of us the eastern boundary of Josephinas, on a line from the top of a mountain north of us to the top of another mountain, to the south; this line also marking the boundary between the states of Vera Cruz and Oaxaca. From the hill we could see a great valley beneath us, apparently of rolling ground, bounded on all sides by high mountains. This valley, I was told, was Josephinas; and I said But where are our 40,000 acres? Our land must extend beyond those mountains. Oh, no! said Mr. Paul. Do you see that high mountain over there? Well, that is our objective point. There is an Indian village on the River Rio Tonto at the base of that mountain and the chiefs of the five villages on Josephinas have been notified to meet us there today in order to arrange their rent and labor contracts for the ensuing year. You may think it a short ride to that mountain, but you will probably change your opinion before we get there, although we shall go in a direct line. It was two o clock in the afternoon when we crossed the boundary and entered Josephinas. After riding about half a mile we crossed the Cotzalopa river, which marks our eastern boundary for a long distance, but makes a...
